

Regenerative Farming:

Balancing production and conservation

For more than a decade, Sam and Sabrina Archer have worked on their 1500ha property 'Kincora', implementing a range of measures to make the land more sustainable and deliver environmental, social and financial benefits.

As a result of their management initiatives, gullies have been revegetated, paddocks are fenced to land class, stock watering points are centralised and grazing management adjusted to enable native grasses to regenerate.

The achievements of the Archer's were acknowledged last year when Sam was awarded runner up for the prestigious national Bob Hawke Landcare Award.

This field day is an opportunity to hear from Sam on the lessons he has learnt in implementing his regenerative farming techniques.

A tour of some of the works completed on their property will also be included.

The event will be run in conjunction with the Riverina Highlands Landcare Network's Annual General Meeting.
